

Genevieve Ginty

Biography & CV

“I was raised on art and the landscape. There were other things, but these made my heart swell and my imagination overflow”

Discovering an affinity with the camera at 15, Genevieve studied at the Australian Centre for Photography during her high school years and beyond. After completing her HSC she was hired by the Australian Newspaper - next in line for a photographic cadet-ship but a direction change saw her studying Fine Arts at East Sydney Technical College instead.

Despite the joyful challenge art college and photography provided, the business of making a living and then raising children became her priorities. It is only in recent years that Genevieve has been able to bring full focus back to the exploration of photography and her art practice.

In 2017, Genevieve and her family moved from inner-west Sydney to Dangar Island on the Hawkesbury River, Dyarubbin, where they live surrounded by an ever shifting landscape of light, colour and natural beauty. This has provided a much-needed connection to the bush as well as a vast expanse of river from which to take photographs. Art and the landscape are once again in full focus.
